

Protocol Name

Authors

The Flanker Task is a cognitive test used to assess attention and inhibitory control. In this task, participants must focus on a target stimulus (usually an arrow or letter) presented at the centre of a visual array and respond based on its direction or identity. The target is flanked by distracting stimuli (flankers) that can be congruent (pointing in the same direction or matching the target) or incongruent (pointing in a different direction or mismatching).

LABBENCH